

SHORT:

Amanda Morgan holds a BA in both elementary and early childhood education and an MS in family and human development. Her past experience includes teaching in public, private, and migrant school settings as well as teaching preschoolers, grade-schoolers, college students, teachers, and parents. She writes, speaks, and consults on the topic of intentional, whole child development and is the creator of the blog, Not Just Cute. In her free time, she can usually be found exploring the Pacific Northwest with her husband and four boys, or procuring copious amounts of chocolate.

LONG:

Amanda Morgan is a proud graduate of Utah State University who holds a Bachelor of Arts in both elementary and early childhood education and a Master of Science in family, human, and child development. She has classroom experience ranging from preschool to sixth grade, along with teaching university students, parents, and early childhood professionals, and has taught in private, public, and migrant school settings.

In addition to her professional experience, nothing has been as challenging or as rewarding as her role of mom to 4 young (and rowdy!) boys. Amanda and her family are recent transplants to the Puget Sound area in northwestern Washington and enjoy exploring their new surroundings together.

Passionate about applying what is known about child development to the areas of education and parenting, Amanda writes, speaks, and consults on the topic of intentional, whole child development and is the creator of the blog, Not Just Cute. Because childhood's not just cute. It's so much more. It's powerful, it's priceless, and it's over way too soon.
